There is no name signed to this singular communication, and who the author of it is will perhaps always remain a mystery. Probably it was written by some admirer of the medicine man.

DECATUR'S TRIBUTE TO GEN. MOORE

Public Memorial Exercises at Imboden's Springs—A Great Multitude Present.

Address by Hon. R. J. Oglesby.

The Decatur friends of the late JESSE HALE MOORE, citizen, soldier, clergyman and public officer, assembled at Imboden's Springs on yesterday afternoon at three o'clock and laid their tributes of love and respect at his grave, in this simple, plain way, doing him and his services due honor. The procession formed on the old square, and marched to the Springs in the following order:

G. A. R. Band.
Dunham Post, No. 141, G. A. R.
Decatur Rifles, Co. K., I. N. G.
Veterans of the County Association.
Carriages containing Hon. R. J. Oglesby, Visiting Clergymen and others.
Citizens in Carriages and on Foot.

A platform had been erected at the Springs, where about 2,000 persons had gathered, and after the band had played selections, the meeting was called to order by J. R. Gorin. Rev. Dr. Davies was chosen chairman of the meeting, who stated that at some subsequent time when all the members of Gen. Moore's family could meet in Decatur appropriate religious memorial services would be held at the church.

"Jesus, Lover of My Soul" was the opening selection of the choir led by Prof. Demorest, after which Rev. Doctor Short, of Jacksonville, president of the Illinois Female College, offered a feeling memorial prayer. A sketch of General Moore, published some years ago in "The Patriotism of Illinois," a bound volume, was read by Dr. Prentice, of Springfield.

EX-GOV. R. J. OGLESBY, the orator of the impressive occasion, was then presented by the chairman, and the General spoke for over an hour, delivering a tribute to the memory of the distinguished dead on behalf of the citizens and soldiers, that was just, noble and brotherly in character. He commenced by saying: Gentlemen, Ladies, Fellow-Citizens, Comrades and Mr. Chairman, we meet again to lament the death of another brother. One by one we are passing away. Few of the veterans of the war of 1812 remain, few of the Mexican war, and fewer still of the Revolutionary struggle. The late war marveled thousands of brave men—numbers uncountable, and after the close of the struggle a wonder existed in the United States as to what disposition could be made of the vast army—what would be the fate of the last grand army. Thousands have gone the way of all the world. I mean those who have died since the war, not the 300,000 to 400,000 who perished on the field of battle; and those who have died have been accompanied to their quiet resting places by the veterans. What does the Veteran's Association mean? It exists to look after the living, to help the survivors and to follow comrades to their graves, to stand by him, to show to the forgetful world, to the too perplexed and anxious world, to show to them that the true soldier does not forget his brother comrade. You come here to-day to pay your last respects to another brother, and ladies and gentlemen and citizens of Macon county, you do not understand why in the wear and tear of life, with one soldier against the other in business, politically and socially, with seeming discord and strife in all the walks of life, you wonder how it can be that when one comrade dies all unite to do him honor. Learn this lesson: If he was a good and brave man, that when death comes the soldier, like the Christian, forgets the past and mingles his sympathy and love with those nearest and dearest to him. At the verge of the grave, near the coffin, under the shadow of that flag which the departed followed bravely to victory, all differences of the past are forgotten and with hearts of devotion all gather to do him honor.

We are not permitted to-day to look upon the face or form of General Jesse Hale Moore, our illustrious citizen, in whose memory we are here assembled. The body lies buried miles away in a remote country beyond the equator, in a country unknown to us, in that far-off land. Our brother had gone there to perform another public duty, far from the scenes of his home life, far from the state where he first saw the blessed light of day, still bearing above him that flag of his country as his guardian angel, potent as the thunders of God. He went to uphold the majesty of law and the rights of American citizens, to protect the interests of the country upon sea and upon land, and we all well know that it would not be six weeks until he thoroughly understood the duties of his new position. General Moore was gifted with an investigating, an intellectual brain, an analytical mind. He was a master of the mysteries of the Gospel. He thoroughly understood the political and social relations, and the published records of the government which will be issued in the course of a year will demonstrate that he was a careful and skillful diplomat, fully acquainted with the relations of his own to other countries. Amid a strange people, a new nationality, strange and unusual to him, he was, at the time, the foreign representative of Decatur and Macon county in foreign relations abroad, and as United States consul at Callao, Peru, the records I verily believe will show that his official acts between Peru and the United States will reflect only credit to us.

Gen. Moore was a manly man, a natural born gentleman, with pure and noble instincts. His character was excellent; there was nothing little, nothing small in him. He grew into manhood a child of nature, born and adapted to the highest circles of society. It may be that not all liked him, but all acquainted with him and knew his heart loved and admired him. You, comrades, whom I see about me, knew him best, for there is no other ordeal on earth that tries and tests a man as the field of battle. Gen. Moore was gifted with a bright intellect. He began life armed and equipped with a collegiate education and he battled at once with the world. He was no loafer, no idler, no shirk. By diligent study of the Bible he became master of the problem of life, and was a man after the fashion of that grand teacher, Martin Luther, in style and belief, and was noble in all his impulses.

The speaker stated that the last interview he had had with Gen. Moore was on the subject of Christianity, when they talked for three long hours. "He took the liberty to correct me, to lecture me, and scold me, and more than once to plainly tell me when he thought I was wrong. That interview showed me his maxims of character completely, and he told me many things on the subject of Christianity that were new and strange to me. He related to me that years ago when he was riding on horse-back from Shelbyville alone a light appeared to him that told him to go forth and preach the Gospel. And at the close of that memorable interview Gen. Moore said to me: 'There is after all but one course for you and me and for all to pursue, however dark the day and doubtful the future, and that is to pray for the light, and it will surely come.' (The orator was here interrupted by Elder Prentice, who said: 'The brethren of the church who knew him longest and best never doubted him for a single moment.') Gen. Oglesby continued: 'I esteemed him for his frankness. We are all subject to criticism, and we must be frank if we would be just. I would thank no one to say anything silly about me on an occasion like this. Gen. Moore was not much of a scholar, though he knew more than most men.' Here the speaker related the circumstances of a discussion between Gen. Moore and Col. R. G. Ingemoll in a law office in Decatur, at which the speaker and the late Major Wait were present. The Methodist preacher and Ingemoll, the infidel, talked for over an hour, and Gen. Moore came out of the contest satisfactory to his audience and winning the respect of his opponent. Our dead comrade was a remarkably good conversationalist and in that discussion developed a resource of information that won for him the lasting respect and friendship of all present.

As a soldier, Gen. Moore was a brave and efficient officer, loved by his men. He was no coward. His men always spoke well of him, and remember one thing to-day, when you hear the soldiers speak well of their officers whom they knew in the war, set it down as orthodox that they were good and brave soldiers, up to the standard of military etiquette and requirements. Can we say more in memory of the dead? It is sufficient. It is just to say that Gen. Moore was a good, honest, efficient, competent officer, that he met every demand and secured the approval of his comrades. He was a grand soldier.

After his discharge he returned to his home, and a few years afterward entered political life, serving four years as a member of congress, two years of which time he was chairman of the Pension committee. He was not an orator after the manner of Cicero, or Demosthenes, or Daniel Webster, but on the stump he was fearless and always made himself understood. 'Being an earnest man, he was led by convictions, and he was a powerful speaker, and an able and earnest member of congress. Subsequently he served as pension agent for Illinois, and lastly he went to Callao, to represent and guard the interests of his country.

We are here to-day to do him honor, to speak of his life and character. We can do no more. And this evidence of friendship and love is the highest test of respect and love. It is the best we can offer, and all we have to offer. Were his spirit here on this occasion he would feel gratified and say it is enough. Well may his children and grandchildren lap his name and be proud of him, and let the absent ones who loved him for his love-ness of character and manhood, learn of this memorial to his memory.

Farewell, Jesse H. Moore, an honor to the church, to society, to the political party to which you belonged, to the Grand Army of the Republic, and to the flag under which you fought. Can I say or offer more. Can we ask more? If we ask more can we receive it? This testimonial is from a simple common people to a simple common life, and that is all there is of it. Death comes to all. We cannot escape it. In the grand reunion of all friends above we will meet him again. And finally farewell, Gen. Moore. Let us try to remember that he was a brother and do all we can to favor those whom he left behind.

The choir sang "Time and Eternity," when Mr. L. Burrows read the following tribute of respect on behalf of the citizens of Decatur:

The citizens of Decatur and Macon county, realizing to the fullest extent the loss they have sustained in the death of Jesse H. Moore, desire to give expression to their feelings in this formal manner. In his life and public career we recognize those qualities of head and heart which seldom fall to single men out from among the masses, and serve to make his conduct a source of inspiration to all. His title to distinction rested upon no happy combination of circumstances—but upon a native ability that had been carefully and systematically cultivated; a force of character that never allowed him to lag in the rear, an integrity that is sure to bring its just reward, and a love of country and of humanity which the most stolid observer could not but admire and applaud. For these qualities in an eminent degree, as he did, his prominence through a long and active life was no accident, but a logical sequence—the natural result of forceful and persistent study by methodical and industrious efforts. He has many claims upon our grateful remembrance, whether we consider him as a gallant soldier, an efficient public officer, or merely as a private citizen, but we most love to honor him for his noble and pure character, his high-minded man, whose religion cloaked no private vices, whose patriotism was altogether unselfish, and whose public acts were guided by the same noble and pure character which controlled his everyday life among his neighbors. It does not become us to intrude upon the sacred precincts of his home life, but it is a pleasure to us to remember that he was a man of high and faithful affection, and that he exhibited in that relation the same noble qualities which challenge our admiration in the more public phases of his career. To those afflicted ones who mourn him, let us give them the comfort of the memory of his life, and let us remember that he has left behind him a noble and pure character, which will be a source of inspiration to all.

Chairman Davies, on behalf of the citizens and relatives of the deceased, thanked Mr. Oglesby for his able and eloquent address, and the meeting was dismissed, with the benediction by Rev. T. D. Weems, of Griggsville, Ill.

The notable given by the ladies of the First M. E. church last evening was fairly well attended, and about $50 was the total of receipts. The refreshments were of the usual excellent quality.

Benjamin A. Davis, aged 36 years, having a wife and one child, was in good health last evening up to nine o'clock. To-day he is dead. He had been out in the country yesterday purchasing cattle, and came home and was cheerful as usual. After nine o'clock last evening he was taken with spasms, and died at four o'clock this morning at the family residence on South Broadway. The deceased was a son-in-law of Mr. John Benz and a brother of Mrs. Billy Downing. The funeral will take place from the family residence on Sunday at 2 p. m., Rev. W. H. Moore, of St. John's church, officiating.

A $7,500 improvement. Justice Ira B. Curtis has finally decided to go ahead and build a big addition to his American House property, on the corner of Wood and Water streets, as outlined in these columns some weeks ago. The lot on which the old building stands are 76 feet deep. The hotel will be extended west 70 feet, leaving six feet at the rear for a court, and the whole brick structure will be made three stories high. The improvement will necessitate an outlay of about $7,500, but it will be money well spent, as the house is centrally located, and if managed properly will do a big business. Mr. E. McNabb will superintend the work and Mr. Curtis will furnish the material.

An Early Fire. Luckily Officer Welky discovered an incipient conflagration in the basement of John Dinneen's shoe store in Commercial block, on East Eldorado street, this morning at 3 o'clock. The fire was located in the forward part of the basement, and was evidently the work of an incendiary. The alarm was immediately sounded and the firemen came to the rescue in time to prevent great destruction of property and probable loss of life, as several families occupy upper rooms. But slight damage was done. Efforts will be made to learn who fired the building.

Jay Gould's Signature. To-day Joe McClellan, of the Circuit Clerk's office, finished placing on record a copy of an important document, it being the voluminous lease of the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific railway and its branches to the St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern Railroad Company. The document contains the signatures of many noted railway chiefs, but the worst scrawl of them all is the autograph of Jay Gould, president of the Wabash company. It is not a circumstance in appearance to the familiar autograph of Horace Greeley, Jay's name looks as if he had picked up a pen and thrown it at the lease carelessly, and after it had formed the word Jay fairly well it got tired and toppled over, making a Chinese character to represent Gould. Probably the great railway king was pressed for time and wanted to catch a train when he signed that document.

More Special Premiums. The following special premiums to be competed for at the coming county fair, were omitted from the long list published in these columns on the 25th:

Best jelly cake—prize, a year's subscription to the DAILY REPUBLICAN, offered by Hamaker & Mosser.

Best bushel of Irish potatoes—a year's subscription to the Daily Review, offered by S. S. Jack.

PERSONAL MENTION.

Dr. J. Brown has the thanks of "ye local" for favors.

Ex-Gov. Oglesby left the city for Vandalia this forenoon.

J. R. Race has been busy two weeks bossing the carpenters at work on the Merchant street annex.

Capt. Hamilton, of Harriatown, came in to attend the memorial exercises yesterday.

Manager Lockwood of the Lighthall company left the city to-day, and the other members of the party left at noon.

The Misses Pet Corman and Maude Thomas, of Bloomington, cousins of Bertha Barnwell, are visiting in Decatur a few weeks.

Dr. Brandom and family will soon remove to Springfield. The doctor has purchased an interest in the retail stock of drugs lately owned by Floury.
